LOUISE MICHEL.

A BRIEF ACCOUNT OF HER LATE
LECTURE IN PARIS.

Noted Persons Seen in the Audience—Surprise of Many of Her Hearers—A Homely but Strong Face—Some of the Things Said.

The little Salle des Conférences in the Boulevard des Capucines was filled last night by a mixed audience, assembled to hear Louise Michel lecture on the "Role of Woman in Modern Society." On one side of the hall was a group of personal friends of the "grande citoyenne," ladies of her sort of political meetings, and these had for the occasion donned their Sunday head covering instead of the slouch hats they wear usually. In the front row sat the Italian Revolutionary Cipriani, recently arrived from the peninsula kingdom, where he has been spending the last few years of his life in prison. He does not seem to have suffered much from the long confinement; his long beard is jet black, his hands are white, his face bears a contented expression, and he wears his broad brimmed, high hat jauntily inclined to one side, with towns of a man who knows that he is in the looking fellow.

AMONG THE AUDIENCE.
Among the determined enemies of society noticed also were Hymynic Loyson and many other well dressed bourgeois. Indeed the respectable element formed four-fifths of the audience, and most of them were young ladies and middle-aged or elderly matrons who had come out of curiosity to see and hear the "monstre" whose name appears in reports of all meetings at which incitements to acts of pilage and violence form the burden of the oration delivered. When the "monstre" made his appearance she seemed in little fits surprised at finding herself in the presence of such a numerous, though not potent host, and were the usually taciturn, small crepe bonnets and long veil that hang over her shoulders that form her ordinary attire when in public, it was with difficulty to discern a faint murmur voice that could be heard above the general hubbub. But as soon as the lecturer began to speak, her voice was very resonant, though falset, her chin again recovered that precision of intonation and coolness which always desert her.

She spoke the plain language of most of her hearers, scarcely saving the female portion of the audience, uttered a surprise quite natural in a quiet life. It was easy to read on their faces that most of them were ready to think her "What! Louise Michel? I don't like Louise Michel we have heard of her, though much about it. That the woman is very ugly, she looks like a Protestant, like a Puritan, and as ugly as any creature. Yes, Louise Michel is undoubtedly a very homely person, but there is a plenitude of intelligence about her face. Still, when she speaks, I can't exactly understand and indeed recovered that precision of intonation and coolness which always desert her.

RELATING AN ANECDOTE.

Starting with the assertion that "woman has today the faults of a slave and man those of a conqueror," she declared that women are necessary, and that a time will come when the world will learn how to utilize their rare facilities. That time will be an epoch, and "weary will no longer be waged, because electric machines will have been invented which will suppress thousands of men at a shot, and thus free nations to disarm." For the present it was the duty of women to prepare for the advent of that golden age when nothing would prevent them from reaching a perfect equality with men. To prove that her sex were capable of that equality, she related an anecdote from her own experience:

"When I was attending lectures," said she, "in an effort to secure a diploma as a qualified school teacher, I one day heard an old savant trying to demonstrate with the aid of two skulls, that a woman's head was smaller than that of a man, but he never noticed that, misled by a change of labels, made by a pupil with whom I am well acquainted, he was all the time using one anatomical specimen for the other."

Now and then Miss Michel said things which pleased the revolutionary group of her hearers, but were not at all to the liking of the rest of the audience. Speaking of woman, as affected by novel impression, she said that for her part she had never felt anything comparable to the sensation experienced when, marching at the head of a battalion of communists, she contemplated the marvelous picture of turning Paris upside down before her eyes against the red background of the glowing sky. But this cynical declaration called forth angry protests, and Louise wisely dropped into another strain, protesting that she did not wish to see women concerning themselves with politics. Scientific and artistic studies were the only ones to which they should devote themselves. "Let us have no baignes," said she, "for the purpose of demanding rights today which will no longer be our rights to-morrow. Woman is naturally good and virtuous, and when she knows all things she will no longer be the charming creature whose coquetry troubles man; she will no longer be faithless, because she will not be ignorant of the fact that her neighbor's husband is not a bit superior to her own." —Henry Hayne in New Orleans Picayune.

THURSDAY, JAN. 24, 1889.

Mr. Smart has now an excellent chance to do something for Brandon, if he has only the will or the inclination. He won his election the last time on the strength of his being a Cabinet Minister, as many of the electors, and even some Conservative, at that time, believed that the man with a portfolio, even if there was nothing in him, could do more with a nod than an opponent, no matter how energetic he might be. The chance to do that something hasn't length arrived, and we are unable to see that Mr. Smart has made the first effort to do it. It is found from enquires made that there are enough deaf and dumb children in the country to require the establishment of a school, under Government auspices, for their education; and, as the number is largely made up from the west, the school ought to be located here, but Mr. Smart is making no effort to secure it. Our court house, which is admirably adapted for an institution of the kind, could be got on most reasonable terms, as a less expensive building and one nearer the centre of the city would serve the purposes for which it is at present used; but Mr. Smart has not turned on his heel to secure it. The people of Winnipeg are stirring themselves to get the institution located there, and the Government will be committed to assistance for it before Mr. Smart will even hear about it, and all he will then do is smile complacently. There is one thing that Mr. Smart can do to better advantage than a private member in opposition—he can draw a larger salary, by $3,000 a year, and he does it to perfection; he even spends it in Winnipeg, though he promised to the people of Brandon in the risk in his election speeches to spend it here. The people of this constituency will yet awaken to a sense of the full value of their "Infall Minister of Public Works."

The tax question, since the Chief Justice gave his decision in Winnipeg against the value of tax sales, is setting the public mind a-thinking. If things are allowed to remain as they are, corporations need hope to make but little out of back taxes in the future, as capitalists cannot be induced to bid at tax sales. As the illegality appears to rest morally on the side of interest manipulated by corporations—in reliefs and additions—it is a clear case this must either be altered to bring it within the legal rate, or some special act must be passed in the interest of purchasers. A show act to legalize titles, to which no objections might be raised within a given time—one on the quieting principle, in force in Ontario, might fairly well serve the purpose. The question is, at least, of sufficient moment to engage the attention of the House, at the opening of the next session.

PROVINCIAL.

Officers of the municipalities can be supplied with tax notices at this office.

The planet Venus is now the evening star and is a magnificent object in the southern sky.

Mossmore has spent $2,000 in new buildings the past year, which is certainly a good showing for a small place.

Mr. R. Johnson residing near Rosseau when digging a well struck coal 18 feet from the surface. The coal bed was penetrated for three feet and found of good quality.

The horses belonging to the municipality of Blanchard which was reported to have been stolen from the roads between Wheatfield and Griswold post offices has turned up all right, having been sent to the dead letter office by the Griswold P. O. clerk on account of the letter being insufficiently prepaid.

Charles McNaughton met with a serious difficulty while crossing the River on Saturday afternoon, with a pair of heavy trunks, loaded with his bedding; the ice gave way, bearing the horses and trunks into about four feet of water one of the horses getting under the ice. Help soon arrived and saved the horses, but the tent and wood remained in the river till Monday.

The Sault Ste. Marie side of the work on the tunnel on the Canadian side is now being pushed with energy. The workers force employed some numbers 120 men, and two teams of oxen are employed in carrying the material which is being hauled eastward, and used in filling up the bank above along the track. Ten horses are to be laid down into the excavation, and the earth, having been first loosened either by a team and plow, or by a pick, is shovelled directly into the cars. The excavation is also kept square on the surface, and the sides will have a slope of one foot to three. The first tier of 16 feet in depth has been completed, and ground was broken on Monday on the second tier. As the "longer," is to be far from deep, it is not likely that the diggers will be at the bottom much before May 1st. On the American side, the forces which had only been very strong, was increased to 120 on Jan. 1. It is expected that the work on each side will come together under the river about 200 feet from the Canadian shore. The approach to the shaft on the American side is only 200, but on the Canadian side is nearly one mile. The reason for this is that from the American side there will be a drop of 60 feet to the mile, and the upgrade will be on the lower the Canadian side. The approaches will not be tunneled until the tunnel under the river is completed. When completed the tunnel will consist of 2,500 feet on the American side, 2,200 feet under the river and 4,000 feet on the Canadian side.

We have engaged the services of Mr. A. G. Hillen, to assist in the editorial and general business of THE MAIL, which will very much improve its utility, and we hope to make it the liveliest, the newest, and the best local paper in the province.

THE CARNIVAL

The Most Successful Affair of the Kind Ever Held in Brandon.

The Youth and Beauty of the City Turn out to Masquerade.

About 8 o'clock last evening "Our Reporter" wended his way up Tenth street to the skating rink, where, as is well-known, a grand carnival was to take place, and it subsequently proved in every way worthy the name. Shortly after eight the younger masqueraders commenced to put in an appearance, and before nine the rink was crowded with costumes of the most varied and elegant style. ## A FAIR DECEIVER.

"She is certainly a very pretty girl," said Henry Aspen decidedly.

"Yes," assented his friend, Mr. Rockfield; "but it strikes me that, for a young lady brought up in the splendors which, according to her own account, surround her, she is rather lacking in refinement and elegance of manner."

"Do you think so?" said Aspen, somewhat uneasily. "Well, perhaps her manners are a little ornamental; but she is sprightly and graceful, and, upon the whole, Frank, I have about made up my mind to ask her to marry me."

"Oh, you have, eh! Then there is no use in discussing the matter any further. Love is blind, they say, and I certainly shall not attempt to remove the bandage from his eyes. Yes, Miss Clarence is pretty, and winning; but have you ever reflected, Harry, how your mother, whose manners would grace a court, and your sister, who leads society in New York, would welcome such an alliance?"

"From all that I hear, Clarence Grange and its surroundings must be more than equal to the Aspen estates," laughed Harry. "And—"

But here their conversation was interrupted by the entrance of a third person, and the subject was, perforce, abandoned.

"Yes," said Cecil, innocently, "I suppose it's all very fine at Aspen, but our establishment at the Grange is on such a large scale, mamma couldn't exist without a French maid, and the cook would think herself abused if she didn't have at least two assistants."

Ellen Rockfield opened wide her blue eyes.

"I should like to see the Grange," she said, innocently.

"Yes, to be sure," said Cecil, rather hurriedly. "And then the picture-gallery, and the billiard-room, and the bowing-alley—I assure you it is on the old castle style!"

"But don't you think the little cottage we called at yesterday very picturesque?"

"Oh, picturesque? Yes, I suppose so; but you see I'm accustomed to things so entirely different."

"How glad you must be to get home!"

"Ah!" sighed Cecil, pausing as she packed her trunk, "there are so few places like my home!"

"Well, puss," said Frank Rockfield to his sister that night, "so your grand-friend, Miss Clarence, has returned to her mortal halls!"

"She has gone home—yes," said Ellen, arching her eyebrows.

"Do you miss her much?"

"Well, no. I don't think I do, Frank. The truth is, I had become rather sick of her boasting. She never saw anything handsome, without declaring that at home she had things fifty times as elegant and one gets a little wearied of that style of conversation, you know. Harry Aspen really smitten with her?"

"I am afraid he is."

Ellen burst into a merry laugh.

"Poor Harry! Well, she is pretty, but, oh, so conceited."

"I am going out to Moulton County with Harry next week to visit Clarence Grange, and play the part of match-making friend, while he proposes the eventual question."

"Are you? Oh, Frank, then you can tell me all about the photos of the Grange. To judge from what I have heard, it is second only to Windsor Castle; I only wish I were going with you."

The mused was floating all the way with a curious brightness, about a week subsequently, as Mr. Aspen and his friend, Mr. Rockfield, drove off to a lonely little mountain inn where he had close to the tall pines of the Canadian forest.

"Can you tell me, my friend?" he said, having a little of him, who sat on the piano steps, half-gazing at the scene from Clarence Grange?

"Clarence Grange?" Clarence Grange? repeated the old man, in a puzzled voice. "I don't know as ever I heard talk on such a place hereabouts."

"That is strange," said Harry, turning to Rockfield. "I suppose it must have been the show place of the country."

"But I can tell you where Widow Clarence lives," interposed the old man, with a sudden accession of intelligence.

"Mrs. Burgh Clarence?"

"Yes—it's just down a piece beyond the swamp—a yellow house with a barn opposite, two miles beyond the plant road!"

"Thank you," said Frank, touching up his horse. "A yellow house with a barn opposite, what a curious idea the country aborigines must have of architecture!"

The two miles were soon passed, the swamp followed in due succession, and then a tumble-down, one-story house, painted a dusky cream-color, with the window studed with old bats, and a pig promenading the front yard, in a wilderness of plants and mud, made its appearance. Just across the road an un-painted barn was facing to show decay.

"Hold on—what are you driving past for?" exclaimed Rockfield, laying his hand on the reins.

"This cannot be the place!"

"Why not? Isn't it a yellow house with a barn opposite?"

"A shanty, with a ruin opposite!" exclaimed Harry, scornfully.

"Still it may be just as well to inquire."

As the carriage paused a slovenly looking girl of eleven years old peered round the corner of the house.

"Does Mrs. Burgh Clarence reside here?"

"Yes, but she isn't home."

"Where is she?"

"Up to Squire Kent's washin'. She washes there Tuesdays and Saturdays, and Wednesdays, and she goes to Mr. Peel's."

Harry Aspen sat aghast; Rockfield pursued the question.

"Is Miss Clarence at home?"

"Cecil! No, she's hired up to Widow Smith's doin' housework. Be you Cecil's beau from York?"

Neither of the gentlemen thought proper to hear the embarrassing question. Harry Aspen only guided his horse around to retrace their homeward path, and Rockfield sat silently beside him until they had driven about a mile.

"So that is Clarence Grange," he said, at last. "Harry, what a lucky thing it was that you did not propose in New York."

"He has deceived us from beginning to end," said Aspen, in a husky voice. "I would not marry her now were she an heiress to all Golconda's mines."

Ellen Rockfield was highly amused by the circumstantial account given her by her brother of Clarence Grange upon his return.

"There was always too much pretense about the young lady," she said; "but, oh, Frank, how glad I am that Harry discovered the truth before it was too late!"

Angel Cake.

The whites of 11 eggs, one and a half cups of granulated sugar, one cupful of pastry flour, measured after being sifted four times; one teaspoonful of vanilla, one of vanilla extract. Sift the flour and cream of tartar together. Beat the sugar into the eggs, add the seasoning and cream stirring quickly and firmly. Beat until ready to put the mixture in the oven. Use a pan so that when the pan is turned upside down on the table after the baking, a current of air will pass under and over it. Bake for 45 minutes in a moderate oven. Do not grease the pan.

Careful Transplanting.

In sowing, careful planting and proper preparation of the soil are to be given as leading to ultimate success. Though work in these are necessary to insure a bountiful return, it is rewarding, indeed, not so essential in the early practice of pomology in this country. Then we had a climate much more moist and the elements, in general, more abundant than in excess.

Nursery rows were the main reliance, and the planter had only to use his mattock in digging and preparing shallow spaces for the trees. His young trees were taken from one place and immediately planted in another, or they grew up accidentally anywhere and were caused such shallow cultivation as was then practised, not only for trees, but for the cereal and other crops. The trees raised in this way were both healthy and vigorous and many attained great size and great age.

They were generally set near buildings, where they also had the advantage of extra food that abounds about same houses. Thus we see the change of climate and other circumstances attending the opening of this country and gradual exhaustion of the virgin soil, force us to cultivate and prepare the soil in the best manner, so as to secure humus and moisture and give our trees the food nature intended for them.

"I am afraid he is."

Ellen burst into a merry laugh.

"Poor Harry! Well, she is pretty, but, oh, so conceited."

"I am going out to Moulton County with Harry next week to visit Clarence Grange, and play the part of match-making friend, while he proposes the eventual question."

HERO OF THE RAIL.*DANGEROUS DUTIES PERFORMED BY THE LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEER.

Qualifications Essential to Success—What to Do When There Is Danger Ahead: Quick Decision—The Cloud Which Hangs Over Engineer and Fireman.

The locomotive engineer is the popular "hero of the rail," and the popular estimate in this respect is substantially just. Others have to brave dangers and perform duties under trying circumstances, but the engine runner has to ride in the most dangerous part of the train, take charge of a steam boiler that may explode and blow him to atoms, and of machinery that may break and kill him and try to keep up a vigilance which only a being more than human could successfully maintain. He must be a tolerably skillful machinist—he cannot be too good—and have nerves that will remain steady under the most trying circumstances. If running a fast express through midnight darkness over a line where a similar train has been tipped off a precipice (and a brother runner killed) by train wreckers the night before, he must dash forward with the same confidence that he would feel in broad daylight on an open prairie. But he does not "heroically grasp the throttle" in the face of danger, when the throttle has been already shut, nor does he "whistle down brakes" in order to add a stirring element to the reporter's tale, when by the magic of the air brake he can, with a turn of his hand, apply every brake on the train with the grip of a vice in less time than it would take him to reach the whiz-pull.

When there is danger ahead there is generally just one thing to do, and that is to stop as soon as possible. An instant saves for slaying of the steam and applying the brake. With modern trains this is all that is necessary or can be done. Reversing the engine is necessary on many engines, and formerly was on all; this would, in fact, be done instinctively by old runners, in any case but this also is done in a second. After taking these measures there is nothing for the engineer to do but look out for his own safety. In some circumstances, as in the case of a partially burned bridge which may possibly support the train even in a weakened condition, it may be best to put on all steam. The runner is then in a dilemma, and a right decision is a matter of momentary inspiration. Many lives have been saved by quick witted runners in such cases, but there is no ground for censure of the engineer who, in the excitement of the moment, decides to slacken instead of quicken his speed. The rare cases of this kind are what show the value of experience and of men of the right temperament and degree of intelligence to acquire experience lessons readily.

PROBABILITIES OF ACCIDENT.

But the terrible cloud constantly hanging over the engineer and fireman of a fast train is the chance of encountering an obstacle which cannot possibly be avoided, and which leaves them no alternative but to jump for their lives. If indeed it does not take away even that, the fact that this cloud is no longer than it is and that these men have saved many others from it.

On the last of roads a freight train wrecked by a broken wheel under a car, may be thrown in the path of a passenger train on another track just as the latter approaches. This has happened more than once. No amount of vigilance or forethought can prevent this kind of disaster. There is constant danger on most roads of running off the track at night, and so many times, many switches being "loose" that the runner can see them only a few seconds before he passes them, but the chance is so small—perhaps one in ten or a hundred thousand—that the average runner forgets it, and it is only by severe self discipline that he can hold him to the rule to compliance with the rule which requires him to be on the watch for every switch target as long before reaching it as he possibly can. He finds the switch set all right and the road perfectly clear so regularly, day after day, month after month, that he may easily fall into the snare of thinking that they will always be so. But like other trainmen, the engineman finds enough agreeable thoughts to fill his mind, and reflects upon the hazards of his vocation perhaps too fully. B. B. Adams, Jr., in Scribner's Magazine:

"Whales of the sea and islands. Few people would guess the hazards of 'towing' when applied to a whale, printed as it was exactly like this in the columns of a weekly contemporary. It is fairly 'towing,' the hook for collecting that whale being given to this species of whale from the various thumping sound they make. A stranded calf which has a very painful call for its dam, which the latter answers in a horrid bark. Its name is really lost to the south island, the proper name being the 'Giant.' The whale is towed to a vessel because they pass across her path, and the guidance of a leader in the shape of an old bull. In the end, however, just before the breeding season, there is very keen competition for this, and, you know, more than once the contending bulls have both been known to die from the effects of the encounter."

The whale is not a very large one, being only from sixteen to eighteen feet long; it has occasionally been taken in immense quantities among the shaws and channels of the Hebrides, Orkney, Shetlands and Fair Isles. When a herd makes its appearance the natives lose no time in collecting all the boats, guns and harpoons which they can lay their hands on. They then dry all they can to get seaward of the shoal, and if they succeed endeavor, by advancing with blowing horns, clapping oars, firing guns and shouting, to drive the terrified cetaceans on shore. Once they are stranded a terrible attack is made, and hundreds have been slain in a single battle. The scene is one of the most picturesque it is possible to witness in the north of Scotland. It is quite another affair from the occasional grounding of a Greenland whale, the ending being of an entirely different and far more gory species—Londen Globe.
